signed, said this morning that he had heard from the Taylor since she sailed. The fact that the wreck carried the adaress 'Yarmouth, N. s.,'" he continued, "does not necessarily indicate that the vessel was the Taylor. There are about 100 ships holling from Yarmouth, and all have the address painted on the side. It is true that the Tayfor should have arrived last week, but delay the arrival of a sailing vessel is no cause for alarm.

Since the Vega's arrival there are no other delayed steamships at sea which shipping people .think might have been in collision. The captain of the Ocean says the wreckage he sighted was clean cut and showed that the colliding vessel must have been a heavy steamer. The wrecked vessel, he says, was a heavy one, and the chances are that the one colliding with it would cither be wrecked or seriously damaged.
